Rapid changes in healthcare are driving transformation in pediatric practice. Now, more than ever, patients and their families have numerous options for where to seek care. Their decisions are based, in large part, on relationships with and easy access to a provider. The Affordable Care Act and focus on the Triple Aim are driving the shift from individual to team-based care focused on building a partnership with patients and families. Team-based care better positions primary care practices to implement enhanced patient-centered functions, like pediatric care coordination and chronic condition management. Given shortages of behavioral and mental health services and issues with accessibility of mental health services, pediatric primary care is increasingly utilized as a source of mental health care or a pathway to additional services.

INTEGRATION OF PRIMARY CARE AND BEHAVIORAL HEALTH IS AN EXAMPLE OF TEAM-BASED CARE.

Working as part of a larger team is becoming part of everyday pediatric practice. The medical home model offers opportunities to systematically address social determinants of health—the social context of patient care—which leads to promotion of population health overall. Pediatric primary care is at the center of an ever-growing system of diverse health and community service providers and organizations—the medical neighborhood. Growing numbers of practice teams are adopting population health management tools and strategies.
